IU Center for Rural Engagement to expand university-community collaboration with Washington County

We are excited to announce that after building upon the energy of nearly two years of arts, cultural and quality-of-place planning and programming with the Indiana University Center for Rural Engagement, Washington County will partner with the center's Sustaining Hoosier Communities initiative to connect faculty and students with community-identified projects.

A year-long, intensive, engaged teaching collaboration, the center's Sustaining Hoosier Communities initiative harnesses more than 20 IU Bloomington courses and the energy of hundreds of students to address projects ranging from health and wellness to infrastructure planning to natural resource management.

"We are so excited to partner with the Center for Rural Engagement. Over the last year, we have had many community meetings and opportunities for our citizens to express their ideas for creating our preferred future in Washington County. It was the merging of the input from all those meetings plus a tremendous response to our call for additional ideas last November that resulted in a successful application to the Center. I think the timing is perfect for Washington County, as we begin a new decade we have the opportunity to work together to make our community an amazing place to live, work, play and raise a family."

With the center's launch in 2018, Washington County established strategic effort with a focus on quality of place, including an ongoing rural arts series involving the Jacobs School of Music, IU Cinema, the Department of English, and other Arts and Humanities Council campus partners.

"The IU Center for Rural Engagement welcomes this opportunity to deepen our partnership with Washington County during the 2020-21 academic year," said Kerry Thomson, the center's executive director. "This engaged teaching initiative will connect a breadth of resources to projects that meet the community's goals and continue to expand local capacity for new initiatives." "Using the Morris Society as a major part of my estate planning gives me great satisfaction. I know that my estate's charitable gifts will grow many times over throughout the coming years. Even modest sums can have a huge positive impact on our community. I am also confident that the Foundation will always be an excellent steward of its resources."
